

ANGORA GOATS.

N. S. Coles, one of the largest growers of Angora goats in Nevada, is in San Francisco selling out his herd. He said to an Examiner reporter:

"I am selling them out. There is no money in them now. The wool has dropped from 70 cents a pound to 28 cents in the last six years. Their wool is used in the manufacture of all sorts of mohair goods and for mixing with short wool. The climate of Nevada is well adapted to them, and there are about 10,000, I should judge, in the State. My ranch is in Spanish Springs valley, ten miles East of Reno.

"The greatest foes to the Angora goats are the coyotes and mountain wildcats. They are very plenty, and they kill a great many kids and old goats, but are fond of the former. There are a few mountain lions, but they do not bother the goats as they do in Idaho, which, like Nevada, is well adapted climatically to them. Oregon, however, is too damp, and they die off quickly and seem unable to breed up to a point where they will stand the chilly air.

"What do they do with these goats here, having brought them to me? Eat them. They make good mutton—better than sheep, really. It is free from disease. The goats never have any disease. However, there is a sort of prejudice against goat mutton. People don't like it as well as sheep mutton. I don't know why. But ever since Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the other patriarchs of Bible times lived in tents, and their servants cared for their flocks, there has been a prejudice against goats. They can't get over it.

"So, while the meat is really better than mutton, it is worth but 8 to 9 cents a pound, while the former is worth 2 cents more. Last Fall I sold three cars, and now I have sold 550 more, and I am going to sell out the whole 1,500 and go into sheep.

"Growers in the Sagebrush State, generally, have come to my opinion, and most of them are going out of the business."

Denounced Himself.

E. H. Grouby, editor of a paper in Georgia, blacklisted himself in his own paper as follows:

"On and after date the undersigned gives notice that he will prosecute any person selling him intoxicating liquor of any kind to the full extent of the law. This is not for the purpose of injuring whisky-dealers, but to get sober and stay home."

—The Interior Department recommends to the Senate that all timber lands in the vicinity of the sources of the principal streams be withdrawn from sale or occupancy and kept as woodland reserves, for the renewal of the public domain forests by replanting; also that the timber on forests-land reservations shall not be disposed of excepting in such a way as will provide against the destruction of the forests.

—The Boards of County Commissioners in the Eastern counties of the State are throwing out all claims for bounties on rabbits. In doing so they lay themselves open to removal from office. The business of the Commissioners is to carry out the law as they find it. They have no option in the matter at all.

—The Sacramento Bee says that Miss Nellie Boyd, the actress, is sailing about California and stuffing the country press with complimentary notices from the Bee which never appeared in that paper. All the theatrical troupes play this dodge when up this way.

—In the eastern part of this State cattle did better during the cold snap in the foothills and mountains than they did in the valleys.

—The Sacramento division of the Central Pacific is now very short of motive power, so many engines being on the wrecked list.
